

How to build a broad and coherent history curriculum

Led by History Resource Cupboard's Richard McFahn, this course will ensure you understand how changes to the Ofsted framework will impact your department and give you the knowledge to plan a coherent, robust and powerful history curriculum.

You will:

- ✓ Consider what 'powerful knowledge' means in a 'knowledge-rich' curriculum.
- ✓ Learn the implications to your department of Ofsted's two-year research into the curriculum.
- ✓ Discover what the key takeaways from Ofsted's new framework and inspection handbook are for your history department.
- ✓ Analyse practical models showing you how to develop substantive and disciplinary knowledge over time to ensure that standards are raised and maintained.
- ✓ Discuss how best to implement and then evaluate the impact your curriculum has on your students.
- ✓ Evaluate how to effectively assess learning (without using GCSE exam questions) across the curriculum.

- ✓ Learn what academic historians consider is vital knowledge for your students to know from different time periods.
- ✓ Take-away examples of big picture curriculum models to use and evaluate.
- ✓ See practical examples of how to focus on getting the balance right between overview and depth to ensure your students gain knowledge and learn well.
- ✓ Leave with practical ideas that you can use immediately to inspire and challenge your own classes.
